

How to approach orthodontic treatment with traumatic loss of teeth

By Erik Reukers

Autotransplantation is not a treatment goal in itself but part of a multidisciplinary treatment plan. It is important to draw up a treatment plan based on a diagnosis and treatment goals. If autotransplantation is part of the orthodontic treatment plan, it must be determined per individual at which point in the orthodontic treatment the transplantation can be performed best. This can vary considerably per individual.

Various examples will be used to explain what to pay attention to and how problems can be prevented.
